Brightleaf Solutions CEO Samir Bhatia's thoughts covered by the prestigious Word Commerce Contracting site

On what companies can do to get a handle on their contracts, track the salient terms and data points, create templates for contract types and clause libraries, workflows -- and more

Brookline, MA – Brightleaf Solutions, Inc., a leading provider of contract migration, data extraction, and analytics, is pleased to announce that its CEO, Samir Bhatia, has been featured on the esteemed World Commerce & Contracting website.

Brightleaf Solutions provides a technology-powered service to migrate contracts and extract data using Artificial Intelligence (AI), Natural Language Processing (NLP) and Machine Learning (ML) software techniques coupled with the review of all the data by legal matter experts encompassed in a Six Sigma process to provide highly accurate extracted data.

Organizations of all sizes, whether manufacturing or technology-based, product-based or service-based, conducting business with suppliers or customers, must put their commitments in writing to avoid any misunderstandings or oversights. This necessitates the use of a contract, a written, legally-binding instrument that specifies the services or products to be provided in exchange for a fee, making contracts the most important papers to maintain within a business. People (even sales professionals) tend to focus on other initiatives after the contract is executed and the project is handed over to operations, leaving the contract neglected. Organizations begin to lose sight of what is in their contracts as a result.

Samir discussed in the article how businesses can get a handle on their contracts, track the important terms and data points, create templates for contract types and clause libraries, workflows – and more – what they can do. Ignore the task at hand and you'll have bigger problems later? Visit below link to view the complete article.
